

Each bar is one choice a measurement could make, and the laboratory dependence it introduces on the beam-energy test. None of them is a property of fragmentation: the first is a failure to control the colour-frame kinematics, the others are cuts or variables that are not invariant under the boost along the beam. The transverse threshold at the bottom is the benign version of the one above it.