

The colour string spans the whole hadronic system: its rapidity length grows like $\ln W^2$. A lab-frame jet is a window onto the current end of this plateau, and how much of the string it sees depends on the boost.